

A statue of a man carrying a calf from about 570BC, found on the Acropolis in Athens

A marble statue of a man carrying a calf on his back. The man has a serene expression, looking slightly to the right. He wears a headband with a braided pattern. The calf is positioned on his back, with its head resting against the man's shoulder. The statue is made of light-colored marble and shows signs of age, with some surface wear and a large, irregularly shaped fragment missing from the man's chest area. The background is a plain, light blue wall.

ARCHAIC GREECE